

Call for Juried Papers

Deadline: March 15, 2022

Notification of acceptance: May 15, 2022

This call for Juried Papers seeks original contributions, including reports of research, theory, pedagogy, best practices, thought pieces, and critical essays that contribute to the elaboration of the conference theme of “Go Back and Get It: From One Narrative to Many.” LIS educators and professionals are re-engineering our standard procedures, practices, policies, pedagogies, communication, and general approaches to our work and other areas of impact in order to become viable in our rapidly changing environments.

During the global pandemic, the world finally began acknowledging systemic discrimination that suppresses the voices of historically-excluded people.++ Calls for social justice, though, fall flat without examining and bolstering the foundations upon which our institutions are built. Similar to the example set by initiatives like “The 1619 Project”++ of The New York Times, Library and Information Science educators must examine the complex history of our own profession and institutions. By including a more nuanced and honest look at our own history, we can infuse more cultural humility into the library profession.

Incorporating marginalized voices into the narrative of LIS education requires us to respond to difficult questions. As educators we must ask ourselves how we may be perpetuating systems of injustice. How might LIS education move beyond performative “diversity” efforts toward measurable, significant, lasting change? How do we continually re-adjust our programs to prepare our students to fearlessly challenge injustice? The ALISE 2022 Annual Conference invites participants to add their own voices to the LIS narrative by sharing their innovations, research, pedagogical tools, and unique perspectives.

Amplifying voices from the past and present demands engagement with a wide range of topics, pedagogies, and research methodologies. Such wide-ranging dialog can only occur through proposals from the entire spectrum of LIS and related fields. We welcome responses to the conference theme via proposal submission to ensure we have meaningful dialog at the conference.
