2024 Call for Juried Panels

Deadline: March 25, 2024

Notification of acceptance: Week of May 13, 2024

Submissions are invited for Juried Panels for the 2024 ALISE Annual Conference, "The Ethics and Evolution of Truth and Information." This conference welcomes contributions that address the ways that LIS educators and professionals are exploring the linkage between professional and educational practices and are identifying the synergy and gaps between professional competencies and LIS pedagogy and curricula, so that we can build a dialogue between practitioners and LIS educators, and provide a platform for creating timely, relevant, and valuable education for our students.

Panel proposals pertaining to the wide spectrum of LIS education, including those focusing on information technology or data sciences, are welcome. Panels may address how LIS professionals and educators are addressing questions of mutual interest, including: How do we, as educators, integrate practice and any of the various professional competency frameworks, into our pedagogy? How do these frameworks – including new competency frameworks for inclusion and social justice – influence our pedagogical and theoretical approaches to teaching? How do professional competencies inform and support our teaching and students' learning? As LIS educators who specialize in theory and research, what is our role in practical workforce preparation? How do internships and field experience fit into our pedagogical approach to LIS education?

A panel must have a clear focus, whether or not it is explicitly related to the conference theme, and the panel must be designed to foster interaction between panelists and audience members. Innovative panel formats and panels leading to future action and research are strongly encouraged! Panel presentations will be scheduled in 90-minute blocks.
